DELHI PUBLIC SCHOOL GANDHINAGAR
SESSION 2026-27

Spectrum Volume-33
July'26 to Sept.'26

from the Principal's Desk

Dear Readers,

It is with great joy that I present to you this edition of SPECTRUM, one that chronicles a season of firsts for Delhi Public School Gandhinagar. The months gone by have asked much of our students and staff, and they have answered with a spirit of enterprise that has carried our name well beyond the boundaries of our campus.

Foremost among these moments was Rangmancham, the school's first Inter-DPS National Theatre Festival. When the curtains rose on the Final Round on 29 August, twenty of the finest teams from DPS schools across the country stood on our stage, each bringing its own voice, its own region and its own reading of the human story. We were honoured by the presence of Shri Rajendra Gupta, the distinguished actor and theatre director, as our Chief Guest, and by the gracious support from Ms. Dolly Chanana, Director, DPS Society. Yet what stays with me most is the sight of young performers from distant cities rehearsing side by side in our corridors, sharing meals and applauding one another without reserve. Theatre teaches what few classrooms can: to listen closely, to inhabit another's life, and to find courage in front of an audience.

To every student who performed, and to the teachers and volunteers who worked tirelessly behind the scenes, I offer my sincere thanks. What began this year as a bold idea has, I believe, found its place as a lasting tradition.

This quarter also brought a recognition that fills every member of our fraternity with pride. The Saaransh Foundation, the integrated special education unit of DPS Gandhinagar, has been recognised as a Model School for UNESCO under the IFIP TVET Forum. At the Forum, convened at UNESCO Headquarters in Paris during Digital Learning Week 2026, our esteemed Co-Founder- DPS Gandhinagar & Founder – Saaransh Foundation, Ms. Dimple Goenka, accepted the role of Founding Co-Chair, IFIP TVET – Global Industry and Employer Engagement. It was a privilege for me to be present on that occasion. The quiet, patient work of Saaransh and its vocational arm, Pehchaan, now stands among the practices shaping international conversations on inclusive and technical education, conversations in which the BRICS nations are also increasingly engaged. This recognition belongs to our special educators, to our students, and above all to the parents who placed their faith in us.

its brightest but by the opportunities it opens for each of its learners, and it is in that measure that we wish to excel.

These achievements reaffirm a conviction that lies at the heart of our work. Education must equip every child with skills that endure, and it must make room for every child to belong. Through vocational training, hands-on learning and inclusive classrooms, we seek to prepare young people who can think, create and contribute with confidence. A school is measured not only by the accomplishments of

As the monsoon gives way to the festive season, the campus is already alive with anticipation for Trinaad, our annual Navratri celebration. Garba is more than a dance in Gujarat: it is a circle that draws everyone in, regardless of age or background. I can think of no better way to celebrate the spirit of this season, and I warmly invite our entire community to join us in the festivities.

I am deeply grateful to our students, teachers, parents and the management of DPS Gandhinagar for their unwavering trust and partnership. May the pages that follow bring you as much delight as the moments they record.

Wishing you all a joyous and blessed festive season.

"GLIMPSES OF A DAY"

In the morning, as the Sun rises
Nature's glory uprises
The mountain's might and the cloud's white
Everything else follows the light

The moon hides, leaving darkness behind
Giving time to the Sun's bright
Rivers flow, the sky glows
Leaving every thought behind

The beauty strikes while the sun set arrives
Every reflection, every gradient,
Makes the heaven thrive

At night, the moon glides
Creating a contrast unforgettable to the eyes
The stars shine,
Appearing to be the ones that satisfy the minds

Everyday this sight gets recited again
Making the Earth a place one must never forget.

The Cost of Convenience

We are the most intellectual species to walk on the planet, but we are not. If you were, you on't destroy your own home" - Dr. Jane Goodall he IUCN Red List of Threatened Species isn't just some pile of depressing figures, it's also a arsh verdict on human greed. With more than 49,500 species careening towards extinction, hich equals to about 28% of all estimated life, we're basically helping stage a mass extinction hile telling ourselves it's fine, it's normal. This isn't some preventable natural disaster though, 's a self-made adversity, powered by an itch for thinly veiled luxury, endless sprawl, power and complete disregard for how ecosystems actually work.

he data from IUCN sort of punches us right in our conscience. Amphibians are getting wiped ut, and 41% are facing imminent extinction. At the same time, 38% of sharks and rays, 26% of ammals, 11.5% of birds and so many other figures are paying the price for our growth. We act ke these ancient, fragile species are a disposable collateral for quick, convenient comfort.

owhere is this ethical slip more visible than in high fashion and taxidermy. Ultra-luxury brands o something brutal, they slaughter exotic animals for skins, fur, and feathers. Basically turning ild living things into prestige accessories for people who want status. That then sparks verexploitation of the poor animals, who have only wanted to live and poaching spreads across elicate ecosystems like it's "business as usual". Taking living beings and squeezing them into easonal trends is utter cruelty, dressed up as elegance.

eyond the spread of buildings, our constant digital and infrastructural links build walls that reak wildlife habitats. High-voltage power lines and busy roadways cut ecosystems into eparate lands. Renewable energy projects, though essential for cutting emissions, often disturb ird flight paths and migratory routes when they are built without looking at nature. Noise and ght pollution spread far from towns confusing nocturnal animals breaking their calls and forcing ildlife away from home. This tech invasion pushes animals into smaller patches of good land ushing species toward local extinction because their natural instincts cannot manage through ur modern infrastructure.

hough living with animals is much easier than we think. The main conflcit is that we do not see nimals as owners of their lives but as inconveniences in "our" world. A peaceful shared life eeds simple nature knowledge and a move from ruling and domination. Simple solutions clude building roads, with animal bridges, protecting their travel routes and keeping natural orders between wild areas and towns. Nature does not ask us to give up our life or comfort, it nly asks us to stop thinking that every inch of Earth is ours. When we stop treating animals erely as things, instead of honouring their right to live on Earth in their own way, living together tops being a dream and becomes a simple act of respect.

The Psychology Behind Classroom Doodles

The ceiling fan overhead churns out a heavy drone while the physics teacher drones on about vectors. Outside the window dusty leaves curl in the cruel May afternoon heat. Sweat prickles at the nape of my neck beneath a damp school uniform collar. My hand drifts downward away from the pen's ink reservoir and touches the rough margin of the notebook. A blue ballpoint pen begins to dance across the faint red vertical line of my notebook.

It starts with a simple box. Then another stacked precariously on top of it building a tiny impossible staircase into nowhere. This is a sort of rebellion against the white void of a page demanding answers I do not possess. The ink bleeds slightly through the cheap paper pulp leaving damp blue ghosts on the reverse side. Every student knows this frantic geometry born from staring at a blackboard filled with sigma signs and partial differentials until my eyes burn.

I sketch tangled vines that wrap around the margin numbers or draw the same pair of heavy-lidded eyes over and over again. Sometimes it is a tiny kettle with steam curling upward or a clumsy starburst that took three tries to get right. These scribbles hold the raw weight of teenage years spent sitting in wooden desks carved with the initials of seniors who left years ago. The notebook page becomes a confession box for the mind. It catches the boredom and the sudden missing of yesterday's afternoon when the bell rang early.

There is a weird comfort in watching the ink dry on a messy thumb smudge. It proves I was here breathing and surviving the endless Tuesday double periods of chemistry. When the final bell finally shrieks through the corridor breaking the afternoon spell, I slam the book shut. The messy drawings remain tucked safely between biology diagrams and physics proofs like dried flowers pressed into a heavy dictionary. They are small secret monuments to the hours spent simply trying to stay awake and human in a room full of strict rows.
